Singing and masks

“Singing can still occur with services: If singing is essential to your practice of worship or faith-based service, this is permitted, but masks must be worn at all times. To ensure masks remain effective and protect you, you should change your mask as soon as it becomes damp and also after you have finished singing. Make sure you bring spare masks, a bag to keep used masks in, and hand sanitiser to use before and after putting on or taking off a mask.

If the congregation has the ability to follow the recommendations in the above statement this information would then be utilised by those undertaking contact tracing. The appropriate use of masks has the potential to alter the risk level associated with events including services should a COVID positive be identified that has attended.”

Communion

Those administering Communion should be masked. Their hands should be sanitised after handling masks as the last action before administering Communion, not before.

Those receiving Communion should keep their mask on whilst approaching the server and whilst receiving. Once they have moved away, only then should they briefly remove their mask to eat or drink the offering.

Whilst cloth masks are great, and attractive, SA Health advise that the best protection is provided by Triple Layer Surgical Masks.
